In one crow alone by S.D Crockett, the storyline is somewhat complex. Basically the main protagonist named Magda who is left stranded in the village she lived in she meets someone else named Ivan she accompanies him to find her mother and find family. She has to overcome many obstacles that she encounters. I never read the first book (After the snow). But my theory of the theme is that. S D Crockett's style is very similar to John Boyne's. Like Boyne's The Boy in the Striped Pyjamas, After the Snow has a lot for the younger reader whilst presenting the adult with a higher level of understanding. In this case, reading it as an adult transforms the book into an eerily prophetic tale. Whilst we're on the subject of age...
